On overcoming adversity, following your dream, and seeking the values and opportunities of the true American spirit.

"From the moment she took the stage, the entire room was captivated. 250 women and girls were silent, hanging on every word and every note. As Tajci wove a web of humor, vulnerability, and reverence in song and speech, for those listening, she became a daughter, a mother, a friend."

Waking Up In America

What if you could truly live your dream?

Seeking to meet the expectations of those we love and respect, many of us tuck away our dreams and aspirations, only to conform and then live a life deemed 'good' by those around us. Living their dream and their vision, rather than your own, you deny the deepest desires of your heart and fail to contribute to the world through your uniqueness and your purpose.

Growing up in the communist system and as a teenage superstar in the European music industry, I lived the dreams of others. As a 21 year old immigrant, freshly arrived in New York and America and knowing no English, I soon got 'stuck' in the consensus consumer vision of the "American Dream". I knew there had to be something more if I could only find and embrace the true American Dream.

After 13 years of touring America, performing more than 1,000 concerts, raising a family on the road and almost losing my marriage, I learned the secrets to achieving the freedom and courage that it takes to awaken from someone else's dream and to begin living one's own.

Tajci in short

Described by many as an uplifting and empowering woman, Tajci is a natural born artist, singer/songwriter and storyteller. By the age of 19 Tajci had become a European sensation achieving platinum record sales, performances to sold out sporting arenas, endorsements by major corporations including Levi Strauss and the distribution and circulation of her very own "Tajci Doll".

Disillusioned by her pop status and worldly achievements, Tajci made the courageous decision to walk away from the glamour, fame and fortune, choosing instead a life of artistic freedom, unadulterated authenticity, and unfiltered creativity.

Tajci is a performer, sought after inspirational speaker, director and host of Waking Up in America, web and TV show, blogger and loving mother of three sons. Happily married to her best friend and producer, Matthew Cameron, Tajci and family reside in Nashville, Tennessee.
